one

Log in and open a world of possibilities.

After signing your subscription contract, you should have received an email from Autodesk with your login information for Subscription Center. If you haven't already done so, visit www.autodesk.com/subscriptionlogin to complete the creation of your Subscription Center account. This simple process takes just a few minutes, but once completed, it will provide you with your member-only benefits.

Assign your users access and break free.

As the Contract Manager, you have full contract privileges. Many managers assign an internal Software Coordinator to manage software fulfillment and upgrades. You can play both roles or designate another individual to that task in Subscription Center. Remember to set up access for your software users. This will allow them to take advantage of all services, such as e-Learning and web support.

Provide technical support from the experts.

Subscription customers can submit technical support requests directly through the Communication Center from within 2008 AutoCAD® based products or directly from your home page, after logging into Subscription Center. You can also track and monitor all open support requests.

Suggest e-Learning lessons to help user productivity soar.

Help your users optimize Autodesk software by encouraging them to access e-Learning directly from the home page after logging into Subscription Center. These step-by-step, self-paced, online lessons and interactive simulations provide an easy way to increase Autodesk software knowledge with self-paced training.

Help your users learn from others.

When users visit Subscription Center, they'll be able to view tutorials by Autodesk technical experts, get the answers to commonly asked questions through the Q&A section, and learn how other customers are benefiting from the same Autodesk products.
